The Business Research Company

The less lethal ammunition market is projected to expand due to the escalating cases of crime. Crimes, explained as unlawful actions or behaviors punishable by law, are activities that violate the set of rules and regulations of a specific jurisdiction. The increasing instances of such activities necessitate the use of less lethal ammunition by law enforcement agencies, giving them the ability to manage and counter potential threats without causing fatal injuries. For example, in October 2023, a report from the Federal Bureau of Investigation, a law enforcement agency based in the US, stated an estimated national rise of 1.3% in robberies in 2022 compared to the preceding year. Consequently, the growing crime instances are fueling the upsurge of the less lethal ammunition market.
