TRAINING

Samuel Bohr, Owner of National White Card Courses, announces the official launch of the White Card Courses programme in Victoria, expanding construction safety training across Australia.

Australia.

“Our goal is to make quality construction safety education that’s simple, effective, affordable, and accessible,” said Samuel Bohr, owner of National Courses Pty Ltd and its trading business, National White Card Courses. “Launching in Victoria allows us to reach even more workers, employers, and training participants who rely on the White Card as their first step towards a safe and compliant career in construction.”

The Victorian launch follows a strong rollout in Queensland, during which National White Card Courses (NWCC) introduced the course across eight new locations in the state, garnering impressive enrolments and feedback. The company’s face-to-face training model, now available in 28 locations nationwide, ensures every participant receives practical instruction, direct interaction with certified trainers, and a deeper understanding of on-site safety requirements.

“We’ve found that in-person sessions foster better learning outcomes and student engagement,” Samuel Bohr added. “Construction safety isn’t just about ticking a box; it’s about equipping people with the awareness and confidence to protect themselves and others on the job, while understanding Australian rules and regulations. Almost half of our participants are in Australia on a visa.”

With its expansion into Victoria, National White Card Courses (NWCC) aims to support the state’s growing

The White Card Course provides participants with a nationally recognized certification upon completion, allowing them to work legally and safely on any construction site in Australia.

Training covers essential topics, including:

Workplace health and safety laws

Risk management and hazard identification

Emergency procedures and reporting

Safe work practices and responsibilities

Successful participants receive their official White Card — a credential required by all major employers and contractors in the construction industry across Australia.

Expanding Safety Education Nationwide

National Courses Pty Ltd continues to innovate and expand its educational offerings across Australia, with plans to launch the White Card Course in South Australia (Adelaide) next. This upcoming expansion underscores the company's mission to make mandatory safety training easily available in every key region.

For a decade, the company has provided short, compliant, and career-advancing courses that help Australians meet their professional and regulatory goals. Each course is built around industry requirements, student experience, and government standards, ensuring consistent quality nationwide.

"As we grow, our focus remains the same — empowering Australians through accessible education and helping industries maintain the highest standards of safety and professionalism,"
