This year's graduates reflect the diversity, resilience, and determination that define UAGC students, with degree recipients ranging in age from 20 to 81 years old and representing every region of the country as well as U.S. military bases around the globe. The average age of graduates is 37 years old, underscoring the commitment by UAGC to providing access and flexibility for working adults, parents, and service members.

At UAGC, we believe education transforms lives, not just for the students who earn their degrees but also for their families and communities."

Gary Packard

By the Numbers:

- Associate Degrees: 135
- Bachelor's Degrees: 4,395
- Master's Degrees: 2,412
- Doctoral Degrees: 12

The most popular majors among this year's class include Business Administration (1,484 graduates), Organizational Management (680), and Psychology (580), followed by programs in Health Care Administration, Human Resources Management, and Early Childhood Education.

"Each of our graduates has balanced the pursuit of their education with the demands of family, work, and service to their communities," said Gary Packard, senior vice provost for Online Initiatives at the University of Arizona. "Their stories are a testament to perseverance and possibility, and I could not be more proud of what they have achieved."

Graduates from the top 10 states include Texas, California, Florida, Georgia, and Arizona, with hundreds more from across the nation and abroad.

"At UAGC, we believe education transforms lives, not just for the students who earn their degrees but also for their families and communities," Packard said. "This commencement is a celebration of the countless hours of dedication these graduates invested to reach this milestone."

The Fall 2025 ceremony continues the UAGC tradition of offering a flexible, inclusive virtual format that allows students and families from around the world to join in the celebration.
