Naming characters has always been a challenge for me,”

Kazor

Following the successful release of "Civil War Battle Born," Kazor is set to embark on a literary journey through small towns across the United States for his next project, "The Mystery Trust: The Beginning." His distinction lies in spotlighting local enterprises, as he embeds them deeply into his narratives, creating a distinctive experience for both readers and businesses.

In his previous work, "Stories of the Mystery Trust Volume 1," Kazor drew attention to various local establishments such as Just Love Coffee Café, Tibby's New Orleans Kitchen, the Smith House Hotel and Restaurant and Smoking Fly Cigars, to name a few. These businesses serve not just as backdrops but as integral characters in his storylines, creating a rich tapestry of real-life community engagement. Kazor emphasizes that these businesses contribute nothing monetarily; instead, they support promotions and book signings by providing items or coupons post-release.

This year, Kazor is set to visit:

- Crystal River, Florida – Crafting a tale titled "Karma Happens."
- Live Oak, Florida and Lake City, Florida – A story titled "Feeding the Poor" will see its roots drawn from these dynamic towns.
- Boulder City, Nevada – Back to his home state, Kazor will pen "Doubling Down."

Kazor invites the local community to take an active role in his storytelling process. "Naming characters has always been a challenge for me," Kazor shares. "While there are online tools, I prefer to involve people directly. A high school classmate even volunteered to be the villain in my last book!" To foster this community-driven approach, Kazor has launched a special link where individuals can suggest names for characters in his upcoming stories: mysterytrust.com/names. Whether you're a local hero, an antagonist, or simply want to lend a name to a bystander, all contributions are welcome.

Join Kazor on his exciting journey as he shares the heart of each town through his work while delivering an engaging narrative experience that celebrates local entrepreneurship.
