I've seen how much gatekeeping shuts out talented indie voices and how audiences are often treated like walking wallets and data for algorithms. CGP Spotlight was built to change that.”

Unlike mainstream platforms that prioritize blockbuster franchises and data-driven monetization, CGP Spotlight takes a human approach: offering stress-free, affordable streaming for audiences while ensuring indie creators receive fair, transparent payouts and long-term career support.

change that — creating not just a content library, but a people-first ecosystem where creators, audiences, and the community all thrive together.”

The platform will feature acclaimed international titles, including projects from award-winning director Joshua Shultz, such as Ride or Die featuring Timothy V. Murphy (Sons of Anarchy, National Treasure) and Americana, a neo-western starring Andrew W. Walker, Ruby Modine, Haley Reinhart, and Andy Biersack.

A 2024 IndieWire study led by former Sundance CEO Keri Putnam found that nearly 37 million Americans already watch independent films, and another 40 million would subscribe to a dedicated indie streaming service. A clear sign of an untapped global demand for fresh, original storytelling.

“We’re indie filmmakers, building the platform we always wished existed,” says Toronto resident, Tazito Garcia, Co-Founder and COO of CGP Spotlight.

Every subscription directly fuels that mission: creators bring their original stories, audiences enjoy ad-free viewing without financial stress, and the entire ecosystem grows stronger.
