The move is a direct result of the foundation's recent partnership with Sharefest Will County, a nonprofit that provides resources of food, clothes, books, jobs, healthcare services, and more. The collaboration is designed to enhance resource sharing and community support within Will County and beyond. By situating its headquarters within the Sharefest Resource Center Complex in New Lenox, the Maddog Strong Foundation aims to strengthen its outreach capabilities and foster greater collaboration with local organizations dedicated to providing resources to those in need.

This new location provides Maddog Strong with increased access to Sharefest's extensive network and resources, allowing for more efficient program delivery and community engagement. It will also provide the community that Sharefest serves the access to healthcare information about organ donation and transplantation, allowing those who receive services to also give back by registering to give the gift of life.

"This move to New Lenox, and the Sharefest Resource Center Complex is all about partnership," said Frank Grobmeier, Executive Director of the Maddog Strong Foundation. "It underscores a shared mission to serve and help individuals and families through comprehensive support services and community-driven initiatives."

"Our purpose has always been to unite people in compassionate community service for those in need. With this partnership, we are fulfilling that by bringing their services alongside the services ShareFest provides to help those in need." According to Gary Cheney, Founder of Sharefest Will County. "For over 18 years, ShareFest has encouraged organ/tissue donor registration. Now, we have a strategic partner right at our Resource Center."
