

Economic Anxiety Captured in New Poetry Collection 'The Tariff of Touch'

The US-China trade war's hidden cost? The American spirit.

NEW YORK, NY, UNITED STATES, October 24, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Economic anxiety has reached record levels, with recent studies indicating that nearly 90% of Americans report significant stress from inflation and rising costs. As policy debates continue in political arenas, a new literary work emerges to document the human experience behind economic statistics. Acclaimed poet Angela Nancy presents The Tariff of Touch, a timely collection that gives voice to the silent struggles occurring in heartland homes and retail establishments across the nation.

More Than Headlines: The Human Heart of the US-China Trade War

The Tariff of Touch moves beyond political rhetoric to explore the personal narratives within global economic conflicts. The collection translates the abstract concept of trade wars into intimate, visceral accounts of American life. Through precise emotional imagery, the poems capture the quiet desperation of a Midwestern soybean field without markets and the finality of a factory gate closing permanently. Nancy's work exposes how international struggles manifest in personal realities—measured in deferred dreams and strained household budgets.

"This collection emerged from documenting the connection between price tags and human stories," stated author Angela Nancy. "The distant impact of trade policies becomes immediate through daily stress and family concerns. The Tariff of Touch serves as both poetry and social testimony, validating that financial anxiety represents a shared national experience rather than individual failing."
