The updated content outlines the critical first steps to take after a vehicle accident, which include prioritizing safety, contacting the police if necessary, collecting evidence (such as obtaining witness contact information), seeking medical attention if required, and informing insurance companies. Every accident is unique, however. Victims should speak to a personal injury lawyer before deciding on a course of action.

“Following any vehicle accident, victims may turn to friends, family, and even insurance companies for advice,” explained Javier Villarreal, lead attorney at the Law Champ. He continued, “But that is not necessarily the best way to proceed. The fact is that only a lawyer, a personal injury attorney licensed to practice law in the state of Texas, can apply Texas law to the case, understand the facts, and give advice on how to negotiate with insurance companies, including possibly litigating against them. “Our new post provides instant clarity for those who are wondering what their immediate priorities might be, but it also serves as a gentle reminder that professional legal guidance is imperative if they want to protect their rights promptly.”

The blog post also identifies a few mistakes that could undermine a prospective case. Indeed, accident victims might inadvertently sabotage their claim by giving recorded statements to insurance adjusters, delaying legitimate medical treatment, or prematurely accepting settlement offers. The Villarreal Law Firm argues that preparation and representation by legal professionals can make a significant difference in the outcome of many injury accident claims.
