

Rising Rock Artist TopTierTitan Bridges Cultures with New Single 'Wah Rey Wah,' Out November 12

It started with death threats and attempted kidnappings and led to covers of 90s pop songs, and bilingual rock tracks.

WASHINGTON DC, DC, UNITED STATES, October 30, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- From Pakistan's underground music scene to the independent stages of Buffalo, TopTierTitan's journey has been one of resilience, reinvention, and rhythm. His forthcoming single, "Wah Rey Wah," arriving November 12, 2025, channels that journey into a cross-cultural rock anthem that celebrates melody, language, and survival through sound.

Written when Titan was sixteen and rediscovered more than a decade later, "Wah Rey Wah" showcases his signature approach: heavy guitars grounded in melody, anchored by Punjabi phrasing that gives the song its chant-like drive. The title, an exclamation of awe in South Asian languages, becomes both a hook and a declaration of creative endurance.

Punjabi has a punch. It carries rhythm as much as meaning. When that hook lands, I want a whole room to shout it back.”

“I don’t write riffs first. I think in melodies,” says Titan. “Punjabi has a punch. It carries rhythm as much as meaning. When that hook lands, I want a whole room to shout it back.”

Before arriving in the United States, Titan was part of Pakistan's tight-knit underground rock community, where playing live often came with real risks. “There were nights we’d get threats before shows,” he recalls. “You learned quickly why you were doing it because music kept you alive.” Those formative years shaped the intensity and independence that now define his sound.

Since relocating to Buffalo, Titan has carved out space in the local scene with his bold reinterpretations of rock staples such as “We Will Rock You” and “Livin’ La Vida Loca.” Each cover blended grit with groove, revealing a creative process that transcends language and geography. “Wah Rey Wah” builds on that foundation, highlighting Titan’s use of multilingual hooks, layered guitars, and global rhythm.

While the track nods to his past, it also signals the next stage of his artistic evolution; a moment of connection between cultures, genres, and generations of listeners who crave something both familiar and fresh. “It’s about finding power in the things that almost broke you,” Titan adds. “Music gave me that second chance.”
