<https://chaseplastics.com/> and their social media pages on December 19th. Chase Plastics will highlight various charitable organizations' efforts on their social media pages throughout the campaign period to help raise awareness about them.

The act of giving has been synonymous with the Chase Plastics name, culture, and the plastics industry for decades. Since the launch of the Giving Card Campaign in 2016, thousands of charities have been nominated. So, it is no surprise that — much like Chase Plastics — their customers and suppliers have equally big hearts and a passion for giving.

Since the campaign began, their generosity has resulted in donations totaling $72,000 to dozens of charities nationwide. It has also perpetuated the spirit of giving — something in which Chase Plastics strongly believes. Each year, the company celebrates “Giving November” by hosting a food drive, shopping for their adopted Christmas families, volunteering at local food banks, and sending care packages to their Adopted Soldier troop abroad. Chase Plastics also encourages volunteerism year-round by offering paid “volunteer time off” to employees and raising awareness of nominated charitable organizations through spotlights on their Facebook, Instagram, X, and LinkedIn pages.

“As we celebrate the 10th anniversary of our Giving Card campaign, we’re reminded that countless organizations are doing incredible work that deserve our support,” said Chase Plastics CEO Kevin Chase. “This giving season, we’re proud to share their stories, connect those in need with valuable resources, and continue helping the helpers who make a difference every day.”
