Our subscription plan gives property managers a clear schedule, consistent results, and fewer access challenges—all while supporting safer, more efficient building upkeep.”

CEO

a New York City window cleaning company serving residential and commercial properties since 2002, announced a new subscription window cleaning plan designed to help NYC buildings cut risk and costs through scheduled maintenance, safety-first methods, and transparent pricing. The plan gives property teams predictable maintenance and fewer disruptions, aligning with 2025 facility trends that favor recurring service models and greater focus on fall protection and access planning.

Safety-first planning aligned with NYC and OSHA expectations

For high- and mid-rise properties, the way windows work is planned can materially affect safety and compliance. Prime Window Cleaning's plans prioritize access assessments, approved fall-protection methods, and coordination with building management to minimize sidewalk and tenant impact. The company's approach is informed by safety frameworks such as the U.S. Occupational Safety and Health Administration's rope descent systems standard (29 CFR 1910.27) and New York City's Façade Inspection & Safety Program (FISP, also known as Local Law 11), which together reinforce safe access, anchorage, and inspection cycles in dense urban environments.

Predictable budgets and less downtime

Recurring service helps prevent mineral deposits, pollution films, and hardware wear from escalating into glass restoration or premature replacement. By bundling cleanings on a monthly, quarterly, or seasonal cadence, property teams gain cost predictability while reducing reactive calls and access mobilizations. For storefronts and campus-style assets, coordinated routes further compress per-visit time, limiting business interruption.

Flexible cadences: monthly, bi-monthly, quarterly, or seasonal programs

Priority scheduling and consolidated access planning to shorten onsite windows

Optional add-ons: screen cleaning, light-fixture cleaning, gutter services, pressure washing, and glass restoration

Transparent quotes based on elevation, access, glass type, and frequency

Eco-forward methods reduce chemicals and disruption

Where appropriate, Prime Window Cleaning incorporates pure-water, water-fed pole techniques that minimize detergents and overspray while improving reach on many low- to mid-rise exteriors. These methods enable ground-based work in eligible zones, reducing pedestrian interference and accelerating schedules, while conventional techniques remain available for elevations and façades that require them.

Built for NYC: High-rise readiness and storefront consistency

From office towers and mixed-use assets to brownstones and retail corridors, the subscription window cleaning plan is designed around New York's access realities—rope descent where permitted, lifts and bucket trucks where effective, and interior access for select glass and fixtures. Commercial clients can align plan visits with façade timelines to reduce overlapping mobilizations; residential co-ops and condos can schedule seasonal visits ahead of key periods to keep common areas bright and views clear.

How to get started

Property managers and owners can request a no-obligation site assessment to determine access methods, frequency, and scope. Quotes reflect window count and size, elevation, access type, and selected cadence. Residential price examples for common window types are available on the company's pricing page, and commercial proposals are tailored to each property's conditions.
