1. Reflecting on Past Relationships

- Are there patterns in past relationships that need to be avoided or changed?
- How can past heartbreak be healed, and how can readiness to move on be recognised?

Reflection on past relationships can uncover recurring dynamics and emotional patterns that may continue to influence current choices.

2. Understanding the Present

- How can the health and balance of a current relationship be assessed?
- What steps can be taken to continue growing together?
- Is the relationship still encouraging personal growth, or are barriers holding progress back?

These questions promote emotional awareness and can assist individuals in evaluating compatibility, balance and shared growth in their relationships.

3. Preparing for the Future

- What personal changes are needed to build healthy, lasting relationships?
- What inner work should be completed before entering a new partnership?

Looking ahead allows individuals to focus on healing and self-improvement. This proactive approach reflects a wider interest in personal development within modern dating culture.
