Founder Patrick Sickafus and his team speak directly with each customer to confirm precise measurements and preferred colors. That made-to-measure approach helps ensure a comfortable, lasting fit and reduces the back-and-forth that can slow down winter wardrobe planning. Whether a classic men's coat, a women's silhouette, or a special color request, the process is designed to be simple, human, and accurate.

"Personal service is the point," said Patrick. "We listen first, confirm the details, and then craft the coat." In an era of mass sizing and anonymous e-commerce, Sickafus Sheepskins emphasizes one-to-one guidance and responsiveness before a single cut of material is made.

The company's value story is equally direct. By keeping the operation focused on craftsmanship and consultation rather than flashy overhead, Sickafus Sheepskins offers real sheepskin quality at prices many shoppers find refreshing. While prices vary by style and specification, customers regularly compare the coats favorably to designer or mass-market offerings that cost substantially more.
