Bird activity on farms can contaminate feed and water sources, spread pathogens, damage crops, and foul equipment—creating risks to animal health, worker safety, and productivity. Elite Bird Management's integrated Bird Control strategies target high-pressure areas such as barns, loafing sheds, rafters, grain bins, silos, packing sheds, and loading zones to reduce nesting, roosting, and food access.

Each plan is tailored to the operation's layout, seasonality, and daily workflows. From netting and ledge treatments to canopy and door-screen exclusions, the company specifies agricultural-grade materials that withstand weather, washdowns, and heavy use. Where necessary, certified technicians perform compliant bird removal as part of a broader prevention strategy that supports biosecurity protocols and regulatory expectations.

These services benefit a wide range of industries across agriculture, including dairy and beef operations, poultry houses, produce farms, seed processing, cold storage, and commodity warehouses. By reducing bird pressure, producers can safeguard feed conversion, protect equipment, minimize product loss, and maintain audit readiness with buyers and inspectors.

Elite Bird Management also conducts on-site assessments to map risk zones, recommend corrective actions, and schedule seasonal maintenance for sustained results. Programs prioritize humane practices, environmental stewardship, and minimal disruption to planting, harvest, and daily chores.
