

Golf Cart Expert Ken Young Jr. of Young's Tobacco Store Shares Safety Insights for HelloNation

Are golf carts safe to drive for families and everyday use?

PORT NECHES, TX, UNITED STATES, November 4, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Are golf carts safe to drive for families and everyday use? According to HelloNation, safety depends less on the cart itself and more on how it's operated. Ken Young Jr., owner of Young's Tobacco Store in Port Neches, Texas, outlines essential golf cart safety tips in HelloNation that apply to neighborhoods, campgrounds, and golf courses alike.

The article emphasizes controlling speed as a first step in safe operation. Golf carts are not built for fast travel, and maintaining a slow, steady pace is especially important when navigating inclines, turns, or areas with pedestrian traffic. Drivers are encouraged to use hand signals or turn indicators and to remain vigilant at intersections.

Seat belt use is also highlighted. While not all carts include them, seat belts can significantly reduce injury risk by preventing passengers from being thrown out during abrupt maneuvers. Staying seated and keeping limbs inside the cart is critical, and the cart should never be overloaded beyond its designated seating.

Nighttime and low-visibility driving require functional headlights, taillights, and reflectors. A working horn adds an additional layer of awareness for others nearby. The article also warns about rollover risks from sharp turns, steep grades, or uneven ground, and advises against mobile phone use while driving.

Young reinforces that basic awareness and responsible habits are the foundation of safe golf cart operation. Full guidance is available in the HelloNation article titled "Golf Cart Safety Tips Everyone Should Know".
