Teams, a trusted leader in nearshore remote recruitment, has issued a public statement to address recent incidents involving fraudulent actors impersonating the company in online scams. The organization is actively working with legal teams, affected individuals, and industry platforms to ensure the safety and transparency of all candidate interactions moving forward.

"We take candidate trust seriously," said Juli Rey, CEO of Wow Remote Teams. "When someone abuses our brand to mislead job seekers, it's not just a legal issue, it's a violation of our core principles."

Clarifying the Facts :

Over the past few days, Wow Remote Teams has received multiple reports of individuals being contacted via messaging platforms, email, and social media by unauthorized recruiters claiming to represent the company. These scams typically involve promises of fast-track employment, requests for sensitive personal information, or upfront payments for fake onboarding procedures.

Wow Remote Teams wants to make it unequivocally clear:

- The company never requests payment from candidates at any stage of the hiring process.
- All official communications are conducted via verified wowremoteteams.com email addresses or designated ATS platforms.
- Recruiter identities are verifiable through the company's contact directory and LinkedIn profiles.

Reaffirming Our Mission

Wow Remote Teams has been serving the global workforce for over 4 years with one clear mission: to help businesses access top-tier remote talent and empower LATAM professionals to find their dream jobs. The company supports organizations ranging from early-stage startups to multinational enterprises, delivering talent solutions that prioritize quality, compliance, and long-term fit.

Every candidate interaction reflects this mission. All clients are vetted, every recruiter is trained in ethical hiring standards, and every placement is guided by a commitment to transparency.

Company Culture and Ethics

Wow Remote Teams operates with a strict code of ethics and a thorough screening process for every client and recruiter it partners with. The firm sources and places talent across more than 30 countries and works with both startups and established enterprises. At every stage, compliance with global employment laws, data privacy standards, and anti-fraud best practices remains non-negotiable.

Internally, all staff undergo training on ethical recruitment practices and information security. Externally, clients are provided with guidelines on maintaining clear, consistent communication channels to avoid confusion for potential hires.

Statement to the Market

While no company is immune to impersonation in today's digital economy, Wow Remote Teams believes transparency and rapid response are key to maintaining public confidence.

"We are not just reacting to this issue," said Juli Rey. "We are setting a new benchmark for accountability in remote hiring."

The company urges other recruitment firms and platforms to increase collaboration and share intelligence when fraud attempts are identified. Industry-wide cooperation will be essential to reducing these scams long-term.

What to Do if Contacted by a Fake Recruiter

Wow Remote Teams recommends the following steps:

- Do not engage. If a recruiter asks for money or sensitive data, stop communication immediately.

- Save screenshots. Document all messages and usernames.
- Report the incident. Notify the platform where the interaction occurred and inform Wow Remote Teams via the Contact page.
- Verify via official channels. Visit www.wowremoteteams.com and use the Contact page to confirm legitimacy.
