Young athletes aged 6-13 will take part in demonstrations, practice stations, and fun challenges designed to build their skills and confidence. With an emphasis on teamwork and personal growth, the camp encourages lessons that reach far beyond baseball. Guerrero Jr. and a team of skilled coaches will support players of all abilities throughout the day.

"Sports and education share the same foundation - dedication, perseverance, and the drive to keep improving," said Scholars CEO Matt Baxter. "Vladdy's passion and resilience on and off the field are qualities we strive to build in every student at Scholars. His amazing journey to the World Series this season is a perfect example of how hard work leads to success."

The camp promises to be a memorable experience for Toronto youth and their families.
