market can be traced back to various factors such as increased usage of soybean meal, hikes in global demand for meat, spread of oilseed cultivation, a surge in livestock population, and dependence on imported feed components.

In the coming years, the market size for livestock cake and meal is anticipated to experience robust growth. By 2029, it is predicted to expand to $91.76 billion, with a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 6.0%. This expected rise during the forecast period is due to factors such as the inclination towards sustainable feed sourcing, increased domestic crushing capacity, growing demand for feed in aquaculture, government backing for self-sufficiency in feed production, and soaring demand for animal protein. Trends predicted for the forecast period encompass the endorsement of precision nutrition technologies, collaborations with start-ups specializing in insect protein, leaps in extrusion and fermentation advancements, tracking and certification in supply chains, and the conversion to digital feed formulation.

What Are The Major Factors Driving The Livestock Cake And Meal Global Market Growth?

The increasing need for feed rich in protein is predicted to stimulate the expansion of the livestock cake and meal sector. This type of feed, packed with a high quantity of proteins, offers essential nutrients that facilitate the growth, reproduction, and overall wellness of livestock. It is becoming more sought-after as farmers frequently employ protein-packed livestock cakes and meals to enhance animal growth and elevate milk and egg yield. Livestock cakes and meals present a cost-effective, nutrient-rich protein source, endorsing enhanced livestock productivity. As per information from EIT Food (Belgium) published in May 2024, plant-based proteins make up 57% of the total worldwide protein intake, and it is anticipated that by 2050, the demand for traditional protein sources will notably increase, with meat consumption projected to surge by 57% and dairy consumption by 48%. Consequently, the escalating demand for feed concentrated in protein is encouraging growth within the livestock cake and meal sector.
