“This accreditation isn't a change—it's a confirmation,” said John Flatley, Managing Director at Etherio. “It confirms the trust our clients place in us and reflects the responsibility we carry in supporting the industries, professions, and people who rely on strong associations to grow and thrive.”

Earning this distinction reinforces Etherio's ability to support complex governance, provide strong financial oversight, and deliver on the mission-driven work that defines association leadership. According to the AMCI Institute, the accreditation process is based on a standard developed under guidelines from the American National Standards Institute (ANSI). It includes an independent audit of documented policies and procedures.

"We're proud of this recognition not for what it says about us—but for what it allows us to deliver with even greater clarity and confidence," said Eric Altschul, CEO of Etherio. "Our clients represent the future of their fields. They deserve partners who show up with structure, accountability, and an unwavering commitment to excellence."

Among 500-plus Association Management Companies (AMC) worldwide, just 80 have achieved AMC Institute Accreditation, demonstrating the commitment and the ability to deliver the highest level of professional management services to associations and not-for-profit clients. For organizations considering new partners or reaffirming existing relationships, accreditation offers a clear signal of quality, reliability, and readiness to serve.

"We applaud Etherio on this significant achievement," AMC Institute Chair Nick Ruffin said. "AMC Institute accreditation requires that association management firms demonstrate adherence to operational and ethical best practices, as outlined in the AMC Institute Standard. Accreditation distinguishes Etherio's ongoing commitment to leadership in association management."
