"Receiving the Herizon Award is deeply meaningful," said Natalie Spiro, Founder & CEO, Drum Cafe North America. "This work has always been about creating spaces where every voice feels heard and every person feels included. When people connect on a human level, collaboration improves, alignment deepens, and culture truly transforms." Drum Cafe North America's programs have been used by Fortune 500 companies, healthcare institutions, universities, government agencies, and community organizations seeking meaningful ways to unite teams, break down silos, and strengthen engagement. Many partners report lasting improvements—including stronger communication, increased alignment, and reduced turnover—long after the experience ends.

Herizon emphasized this year's winners as women whose leadership is reshaping how organizations work and thrive. In the official awards announcement, Eliana Starbird, Chief Nominations Officer and Advisory Board Member for the Herizon Awards, stated: "These women are not just succeeding. They are redefining success."

Spiro's recognition reflects the growing influence of experiential learning and human-centered leadership in modern workplaces. Her methodology—rooted in connection, inclusion, and shared experience—continues to shape leadership development, learning and development programs, and culture transformation initiatives across North America.
