BURLINGTON, VT, UNITED STATES,

-- Driving Innovation in Clean Energy,
Infrastructure, and Climate-Focused
Systems for a Better Tomorrow

Georgia Traver, a dedicated Project Manager and Terra.do Climate Fellow is making significant strides in the quest for a cleaner and more sustainable world. With over six years of experience leading transformative projects in healthcare, IT, and renewable energy, Georgia has become known for her capacity to drive systemic change with both clarity and purpose. Since September 2025, she has taken on the role of Operations and Maintenance Assistant Manager at Bullrock in Burlington, Vermont, and is excited to grow with a company that builds with intention and follows through on its commitments.

Georgia's journey into the world of climate action and project management culminated during her graduate studies at Boston University. Her capstone project for Ørsted involved designing an AI-driven enterprise architecture strategy that not only improved offshore wind operations by 15 percent but also increased maintenance efficiency by 20 percent. This pioneering project exemplifies her commitment to marrying technology and sustainability, paving the way for innovative solutions in the renewable energy sector.

In her role as Project Manager at HMSA, Hawaii's largest health insurer, Georgia led an enterprise-wide transformation that revolutionized operational efficiency. By reducing vendor contract expirations by an impressive 96 percent through automation and cross-functional alignment, she showcased her ability to harness technology to drive meaningful change in organizations.

As a leader, Georgia attributes her success to a combination of resilience, intuition, and the invaluable support of mentors and peers. Each defining moment in her life has been shaped by her willingness to trust her instincts and pursue change, even amidst uncertainty. She has learned to adapt swiftly, rise from setbacks, and continually strive towards greater goals. Along the way, Georgia has been fortunate to have mentors and peers who believed in her potential and offered steadfast support. Their encouragement, combined with her own determination, has shaped the leader she strives to be—one who moves forward with confidence while extending the same compassion and guidance to others.

The most valuable career advice Georgia has ever received is to let go of the need to feel completely prepared before taking the next step. She believes true growth and advancement happen when we move forward despite uncertainty—embracing discomfort, trusting our instincts, and having faith in our ability to navigate challenges and uncover solutions along the way.

Georgia's wisdom extends beyond her own experiences. She passionately advocates for women entering the industry, urging them to “kick the door open” and step inside with confidence. Her message resonates with women across all stages of their careers, emphasizing that age should never dictate one's ability to reinvent themselves. “Trust in your skills, claim your place, and resist the urge to wait for permission to lead. At the same time, embody grace and compassion, for true strength lies in the ability to create impact while honoring the dignity of those around you,” she affirms.

Despite the challenges posed by the male-dominated structure of the industry, Georgia views this as an opportunity to reshape the narrative and amplify diverse voices. She firmly believes that the path forward requires a blend of courage and humility—the resolve to lead boldly and the wisdom to listen and collaborate with others towards lasting progress.

Georgia's core values of integrity, compassion, and leading by example drive her professional and personal endeavors. She is committed to making a meaningful impact and stands firmly for what she believes in, extending her advocacy for environmental protection and animal rights into her daily life. Inspired by her farming roots, Georgia practices sustainable living through her gardening, no-waste principles, and whole food cooking that celebrates “eating the rainbow”. Alongside her husband, she cares for their rescue husky and cats while volunteering at a local bee apiary.

Georgia Traver is not just a project manager; she is a catalyst for change, channeling her resilience and purpose into building a future where sustainability and community thrive together. For her, success is measured not just by the results delivered but by the positive differences made in the lives of individuals, communities, and the world at large.
