About

Jay Brockman is a contemporary realist painter whose work transforms the familiar into something quietly extraordinary. Through cityscapes and window reflections, he captures the pulse of urban life — the way light shifts across glass, the feeling of movement and stillness coexisting. Sharing time between Los Angeles and Sausalito California, his paintings reveal how beauty hides in plain sight, inviting viewers to slow down and see their world anew. Brockman's work has been exhibited in the de Young Museum in San Francisco as well as leading galleries including Skidmore Contemporary, Wyland Gallery Kauai, Lawrence Asher, and Billis Williams, and continues to bridge craftsmanship, concept, and emotion.
