"Our program would not be possible without the generosity of donors," said MPA founder and Coach Donnell Bratton. "Because of the support we have received, our players can develop as people and athletes to thrive, not just survive and make a greater impact on the world."

In less than a decade, Minnesota Preparatory Academy has become a global destination for some of the best high school-age players in the world. This year's international roster features prep players from Belgium, France, South Sudan, Ireland, the United Kingdom and the Virgin Islands.

With the landscape of college and professional basketball changing, programs like Minnesota Prep Academy are vital to providing playing options to players who have potential but haven't been discovered by college and professional programs. Since its inception, the MPA has helped 106 student athletes receive college basketball scholarships. This year alone, 24 former Academy athletes will be playing college basketball at college programs like Auburn, Gardner-Webb, Memphis, and Kansas State, just to name a few.

"Participation in a great event like Give to the Max helps us do more for our athletes and open more doors to their future," said Bratton. "We are humbled by the support and excited to show what that support can turn into."

About Give to the Max:

Give to the Max started in 2009 as a one-time campaign to mark the launch of GiveMN.org, Minnesota's digital home for generosity. The results of that day, $14 million raised in just 24 hours—blew everyone's expectations out of the water, and a new Minnesota tradition was born. In fact, Give to the Max was one of the nation's first online giving days and now serves as a national model for giving days across the country. In the years since, nearly one million donors have given more than $355 million to 14,000 nonprofits and schools as part of Minnesota's giving holiday.
