Industry reporting indicates that family and multigenerational travel remain priorities for many travelers into 2025, with small-group formats favored for access, personalization, and comfort. Broader sector signals, including coverage of steps toward the resumption of some cross-strait group travel, continue to be monitored by operators and destinations alike.

Program highlights

The expanded small-group family collection emphasizes intimate group sizes, tailored days, and hands-on cultural learning. Representative experiences include:

- Family-friendly cultural immersion in Taipei, including architecture, museums, and neighborhood foodways.
- Seasonal nature and wellness days at alpine lakes and hot springs, with gentle walks and scenic drives suitable for mixed ages.
- High-mountain tea introductions led by expert hosts, along with market visits and optional cooking sessions.

- Classic circuits to sites such as Sun Moon Lake, Taroko, Alishan, Jiufen, Tainan, and Kaohsiung, balanced to reduce transfers.

Each itinerary is custom-curated by Life of Taiwan specialists based on family size, ages, interests, and accessibility needs. The company coordinates transport, vetted accommodations, dining, and timed entry at popular sites to ease crowding and improve flow.

Designed for multigenerational travel

Small-group formatting supports intergenerational comfort and flexibility. Typical features include:

- Shorter transfer blocks with frequent stops, stroller- and senior-friendly route options, and contingency plans for weather.
- Expert, English-speaking guides who provide context-rich interpretation across food, tea, culture, history, and nature.
- Crowd-aware scheduling around seasonal windows such as lantern festivals, cherry blossom periods, and autumn foliage.
- Dining that can accommodate dietary requirements and age-based preferences without sacrificing regional depth.
