Podcasting has moved beyond a niche hobby”

“Podcasting has moved beyond a niche hobby,” said Ben Paul, Founder of ATL Podcast Pros. “Today, thought leaders, professionals and faith-driven creators are going all in on production quality to share their message. But many lack the technical know-how to build a space that looks, sounds, and records like a pro. Our new service fills that gap by delivering a plug-and-play, studio-grade setup customized for each creator’s environment.”

Why the Demand Is Exploding

The rise in podcast listenership is matched by a surge in quality content creation. According to the 2025 Global Podcast Trends Report, more than 605,000 active podcasts released new episodes in the year — signaling a growing commitment to professional, long-term production.

Many creators are turning to podcasts not just for outreach or ministry, but as a core component of their personal brand and business. Yet, the technical complexity of building a studio — choosing the right microphone, lighting, layout, and acoustic treatment — can be a barrier.
