course designed to empower parents with the knowledge and tools to support their child's nervous system regulation and overall development, especially for families navigating sensory challenges, emotional outbursts, or long waitlists for services.

“We’re witnessing more children struggling to regulate, connect, and thrive than ever before, and parents are desperate for answers that actually work. After 25 years in pediatric occupational therapy, I’ve seen what truly changes a child’s trajectory and it’s not another quick fix or sticker chart. It’s understanding how the nervous system actually works, and how to nourish and rewire it.” says Terin Fetty, Director at the Skyclimb Sensory Development Center. “The nervous system plays a crucial role in child development, yet it's often overlooked in favor of labels and surface-level behavior strategies.”

The REset Roadmap offers a practical, science-backed system to support a child's development from the ground up, encompassing strategies for nutrition, sensory processing, integrating primitive reflexes, as well as techniques for both co-regulation and self-regulation.

“We understand how urgent it feels when your child needs help now and you don’t want to have to wait months to see a specialist before they can get it,” explains Fetty. “In this course, you’ll receive easy-to-follow, evidence-based strategies that empower you to support your child’s development right away. From sensory challenges to motor delays and behavioral struggles, these tools are designed to help you make a positive impact in your child’s life immediately.”
