testosterone treatment, today announced its official rebrand to Hormn, marking the beginning of a nationwide expansion into a full-scale, technology-driven men's health platform. The change reflects a broader mission to modernise how Australia diagnoses, treats, and manages male hormonal and metabolic health challenges.

Founded in 2022 by Ash Bryant after years of personal struggle with undiagnosed low testosterone, Enhanced Mens Clinic quickly grew into the country's most trusted TRT clinic. Built on clinical transparency and modern evidence-based care, the clinic became a lifeline for thousands of Australian men who were overlooked or misdiagnosed by traditional systems.

With the launch of Hormn, the company expands well beyond TRT. Backed by Australia's most awarded doctor, Professor Andre Van Zundert, now serving as Chief Medical Officer, Hormn combines world-class clinical leadership with a next-generation telehealth platform. This includes a fully integrated digital patient portal, streamlined blood test ordering, automated treatment pathways, nationwide telehealth coverage, and precision-driven medical protocols. The new platform is purpose-built to deliver safer, faster, and more personalised care at national scale.

Hormn's mission is clear: to correct outdated clinical standards, provide modern evidence-based treatment, and make high-quality men's healthcare accessible across Australia. The company's new software infrastructure allows patients to move seamlessly from testing to diagnosis, doctor consultation, prescription, and ongoing monitoring with unmatched speed and convenience.

“What started as a solution to my own experience has grown into a national movement,” said founder Ash Bryant. “Men in Australia deserve modern hormonal healthcare, delivered with precision and compassion. Hormn is built to deliver that future.”

With demand surging, new doctors joining the medical team, and an advanced digital ecosystem ready to scale, Hormn is positioned to redefine men's healthcare in Australia for years to come.
