Dubai Founders Club stated that the regional chapter model is designed to reflect the growing interconnectedness of Gulf economies, where founders and business leaders increasingly operate across borders. By developing city-based chapters, the platform aims to encourage collaboration between local business communities and facilitate knowledge exchange across the region.

“Entrepreneurs in the Gulf often work across multiple markets, and there is value in creating structured forums that reflect this regional reality,” said a spokesperson for Dubai Founders

Club. "The planned chapter structure is intended to support local engagement while enabling cross-market dialogue among founders and senior professionals."

The announcement comes amid continued growth in startup activity and SME formation across the GCC, supported by economic diversification strategies and increased investment in innovation-driven sectors. Industry analysts note that regional networking platforms can play a role in strengthening business linkages and improving access to market insights.

According to the organization, each chapter will operate with a locally relevant focus, taking into account the regulatory, cultural, and industry-specific dynamics of its host city. Dubai Founders Club also indicated that partnerships with local business communities and professional groups are being explored as part of the rollout process.

The expansion is expected to be implemented in phases, with timelines and formats varying by city based on local readiness and demand.
