This recognition highlights the significance of the project within the industry, acknowledging its innovative approach to sustainable urban living.

Eden Rise addresses the pressing issue of food deserts in Chicago by integrating vertical farms into skyscrapers, creating a self-sustaining urban ecosystem that provides fresh, locally grown produce to underserved communities. This innovative design aligns with the growing trend of sustainable architecture and offers practical benefits for residents, the industry, and the environment.

Inspired by the patterns of water droplets, Eden Rise features four interconnected towers with a tubular structure supported by a diagrid exoskeleton.
