The CIMA Method is structured around four essential pillars: Create, Invest, Multiply, and Assure. This practical system offers a roadmap for anyone seeking to improve their relationship with money and work toward financial freedom through actionable strategies and clear guidance.

Originally from Colombia and operating in Silicon Valley for the past five years, Mahecha has founded five companies across the sectors of services, commerce, logistics, and real estate investment. Through these ventures, he develops initiatives that expand economic opportunities and provide practical financial solutions for the Latino community.

According to company representatives, the CIMA Method addresses the real-world financial challenges facing families and entrepreneurs. The Create pillar focuses on building sustainable income and diversifying revenue streams. The Invest stage teaches strategic money allocation through real estate, financial instruments, and asset-building strategies. The Multiply pillar emphasizes scaling income and investments with long-term vision, while the Assure stage protects accumulated wealth through insurance, legal structures, and comprehensive financial planning.

Through his platform EdimerFinanzas.com, educational programs, workshops, conferences, and digital content, Mahecha has built a rapidly growing audience committed to improving their financial habits and making better economic decisions. The platform serves as a central hub for financial education resources tailored to the needs of Hispanic families seeking clarity and direction in the competitive U.S. economic environment.
