Founded in Finland, Otso Golf has gained recognition for its D1 putter, which features low-torque technology in a clean, functional design. The putter has been available for testing in Finland and has built a small but dedicated following among Nordic golfers who appreciate precision-engineered equipment with understated elegance.

"This acquisition represents a natural evolution of our mission to provide technologically advanced, beautifully designed equipment that golfers can actually afford," said Sebastian Haapahovi, CEO of Takomo Golf. "As we continue our rapid growth, adding Otso's innovative low-torque putters and design capabilities to our lineup allows us to deliver world-class Finnish craftsmanship and the putter technology that golfers everywhere are asking for."

Miikka Farin is the CEO of Otso Golf. "Joining Takomo is the perfect next chapter for Otso. Their brand strength, global reach, and loyal customer base will allow us to put our putters in the hands of tens of thousands of golfers who will truly appreciate the innovation and design we've focused on since our inception."

The acquisition will allow Otso's putter line to be integrated into Takomo's existing offerings, making the products available to Takomo's growing international customer base. Both companies emphasized that the shared Finnish heritage, commitment to minimalist design, and focus on quality craftsmanship made this partnership a natural fit.

In the golf putter market, most companies are moving toward low-torque/zero-torque product offerings, given the rapid amateur and professional adoption of these technologies. With this acquisition, Takomo will follow suit. The key differences being the focus on minimalism and accessible pricing.
