director of Learning Resources and Products*

UAGC Learning Resources and Library teams, led by Lindsay Devine, senior director of Learning Resources and Products, and Kira Heske, associate director of Learning Support. The team is recognized for its partnership in advocating for and advancing high-quality course materials for students at a low or no cost.

"Our work is driven by a commitment to reduce textbook costs without compromising quality, and we're proud of how our teams work together to deliver on that promise." said Devine and Heske. "We are honored to receive this recognition from ADEIL and grateful for the cross-campus collaboration that makes this work possible."

The ADEIL course award recognizes the accomplishment of the instructor, author, primary editor, and design teams who worked together to create exemplary courses. As part of this recognition, the ADEIL Course Award Honorable Mention highlights a course that transforms everyday reading into a powerful, portable skill set for college, career, and life.

GEN 104: Reading Strategies, led by Rebecca Campbell, assistant professor at UAGC, received this honor for elevating foundational skills through accessible design, iterative practice, and authentic reflection.

“This recognition reflects the commitment of our faculty and staff to ensuring that high-quality, affordable learning experiences are accessible to all students,” said Gary Packard, senior vice president for Online Initiatives at the University of Arizona. “UAGC exists to expand educational opportunity, and these awards reaffirm the impact of that work every day.”
