EINPresswire.com/ -- A new episode of Modigent In Focus pulls back the curtain on Modigent's Texas strategy, as South Central Region President Frank Doyle details how integration and expansion are reshaping the region. The conversation centers on Modigent's strengthened presence in Dallas/Fort Worth, Houston, San Antonio, Austin, and the Rio Grande Valley—and how these markets now operate as a connected "Texas corridor." Doyle points to strong regional performance, a major Site

Services operation supporting a large international airport, and increasing cross-company collaboration that is improving safety, resource sharing, and workforce deployment.

A key highlight: Modigent's acquisition of Southland Mechanical in Houston, which deepens Gulf Coast capabilities and expands the company's reach across industrial, mission-critical, energy, healthcare, and infrastructure markets. Doyle notes that Houston's long cooling season also demands high-performing service teams, an area where Modigent is scaling quickly.

Whether you're in Albuquerque, Austin, San Antonio, or Houston, the message is the same: one safety culture, one Modigent standard.”

The episode also details the opening of a new regional hub in San Antonio, expanded operations in Austin, and continued growth in Harlingen—moves that solidify Modigent's statewide coverage and support faster response times for clients across Texas.

Doyle emphasizes that culture and safety remain the backbone of integration. “Whether you’re in Albuquerque, Austin, San Antonio, or Houston, the message is the same: one safety culture, one Modigent standard.”

The segment closes with a look ahead: deeper integration, workforce development, and continued momentum across the region. The full episode is available now on Modigent’s website and YouTube channel:
