buy the laptop, buy the software, and are looped into buying more and more as they try to break through in an industry they are passionate about. Amateurs and beginners need a technology and a solution to start and surge their music production cheaply and professionally.

A recent release found on the App Store seeks to provide the solution, MIDI producer. In the wave of AI-centered software, MIDI producer's relevance has surfaced because it is inherently both advanced, and amateur-friendly. The creator, a software development company called Freelance IO, plans to grow with the app and emerge into new territory with its users. Real viability for the app will depend on its ability to deliver in a few areas, including music composition, software development, AI and business/market feasibility.

In the app, drop-downs and other menus receive a users' technical and creative constraints for a new MIDI file. The information is then sent to Google's Gemini which responds with a final MIDI file, and a respective mp3, which serves as a preview. Freelance IO sees MIDI Producer as a product, but also as a project that solves and circumvents legitimate issues of originality and ownership with AI-produced material. The company is excited to see its project be part of this new conversation and jumpstart a new way of thinking about music creation and original authorship.

App Key Features

“The app is emerging in a time of an AI-race and the company is being founded under very new territory. Most projects devoted to exploiting AI’s newest capabilities could go really well or tank on its first voyage. We at MIDI Producer are optimistic about the future and potential of AI-assisted products, especially in music production.”

“Issues in pilot runs of MIDI Producer ran parallel to bugs Google experienced as the creator of Gemini. Because of unexpected hiccups, MIDI Producer’s launch was phased in both in its technical and merchandising rollouts. Issues in today’s software development world are sometimes indistinguishable from the top 10 tech companies and first-time, novice developers. Freelance IO plans to work in conjunction with the largest tech companies to fill gaps in AI’s reach and potential.”
