Which Market Player Is Leading the Command And Control Systems Market?

According to our research, RTX Corporation led global sales in 2023 with a 5% market share. The Raytheon Intelligence And Space division of the company partially involved in the command and control systems market, develops and provides integrated sensor and communication systems for advanced training, advanced missions and cyber and software solutions to intelligence, defense, federal and commercial customers.

How Concentrated Is the Command And Control Systems Market?

The market is concentrated, with the top 10 players accounting for 30% of total market revenue in 2023. This level of concentration reflects the industry's high technological complexity, substantial capital requirements, and the critical need for trusted, secure, and mission-ready solutions. Leading companies such as RTX Corporation, General Dynamics Corporation, Thales Group, Lockheed Martin Corporation, Rheinmetall AG, BAE Systems plc, Boeing, CACI International Inc, Elbit Systems Ltd, and Saab AB maintain strong positions through advanced multi-domain C2 platforms, deep government relationships, and extensive integration capabilities. While these top players dominate large defense modernization programs, smaller and specialized firms continue to support niche operational needs and regional requirements. As global defense forces accelerate investments in interoperable, AI-enabled, and cyber-resilient C2 infrastructures, the market is expected to see increased consolidation, strategic collaborations, and long-term modernization partnerships—further reinforcing the influence of leading vendors within the broader command and control ecosystem.
