Now in its eighth year, Built In's Best Places to Work program celebrates the companies shaping the future of work. In a rapidly evolving AI-first job market, recognition as a Best Place to Work helps employers stand out as trusted brands when candidates turn to tools like ChatGPT and Google AI Overviews to research where to work next.

"Today's candidates discover the companies they want to work for using AI tools," said Maria Christopoulos Katris, Founder & CEO of Built In. "Earning a Best Place to Work award not only signals to candidates that you invest in your people, it's a lever to strengthen how AI search tools understand and represent your company's story."

Coinme was honored on the Best Startups to Work For in Seattle list. The awards reflect Built In's data-driven approach, evaluating companies based on compensation, benefits, and company-wide culture programs.

As a fully remote-first organization, Coinme has prioritized building a distributed workplace culture that empowers employees to thrive from anywhere. The company has implemented comprehensive remote work policies, invested in collaboration tools, and developed inclusive practices that ensure every team member feels connected to the mission regardless of location.

"We've been intentional about building a strong company culture and benefits that attract top talent," said Neil Bergquist, CEO and co-founder of Coinme. "Being remote-first allowed us to build an inclusive, flexible workplace that attracts exceptional talent worldwide. Our team is united by our mission to expand access to crypto and create broader financial opportunities for everyone, and we've proven that mission-driven work transcends physical office boundaries."
