No matter where your home stands today, we'll bring the expertise and momentum to move it forward. Essential repairs, modern upgrades, and advanced electrification services come together under one trusted team focused on safety, performance, and long-term reliability.

Frequently Asked Questions About the Transition

1: Will my electrical service or scheduled project change?

If you have a service scheduled in the new year, don't worry, as all scheduled residential electrical services, installations, and ongoing projects will continue exactly as planned. Timelines, scope of work, and previously discussed details remain in place, with no interruptions caused by the transition.

2: Will I still be working with the same electricians?

Yes, the same licensed electricians, project managers, and support staff will continue performing the work. Going forward, new appointments, estimates, and follow-up services will simply be coordinated through Trout Electric. You may notice updated branding on invoices, emails, or service vehicles, but the process stays familiar and simple for homeowners.

3. Do I need to take any action because of the transition?

No action is required from customers. Existing service agreements, project plans, warranties, and service records will be automatically carried over, with no additional paperwork, approvals, or updates required on your end. Any work already scheduled will move forward as planned, and previously discussed pricing and scope remain unchanged.

4. Will pricing, warranties, or service guarantees change?

Pricing remains clear and consistent with original quotes, and all existing warranties and service commitments stay fully valid. There are no changes to coverage or guarantees as a result of the transition, reinforcing accountability and giving homeowners confidence that their electrical work continues to be supported by reliable, dependable service.
