TrainingToday®, its workforce training platform, has been awarded in the Best Advance in Learning Management Technology for Compliance Training category in a national awards program honoring technology solutions that demonstrate clear business value, innovation, and measurable results.

TrainingToday is a comprehensive online training platform that combines a configurable learning management system (LMS) with industry- and state-specific course libraries developed and maintained by BLR's in-house subject matter experts. The platform supports compliance, onboarding, and professional development initiatives across a wide range of organization types.

Judges recognized TrainingToday for its ability to deliver consistent, compliant training through expert-developed courses and a configurable learning management system used across HR, environmental health and safety (EHS), and professional development programs.

"This award recognizes the practical work our teams do every day, monitoring regulatory changes, translating requirements into clear training, and supporting a platform that organizations can actually manage," said Kim St. Lawrence, Senior Vice President of Product at BLR. "Our focus has been on accuracy, usability, and measurable outcomes, particularly for organizations with limited time and resources."

To learn more about what made TrainingToday a Gold award winner, explore the course topics on BLR's Employee Training page, or visit the Learning Management System page to see how TrainingToday delivers a modern, compliance-focused learning experience. Organizations can also schedule a consultation with a TrainingToday expert to learn more.
