

Celerart Creates Comprehensive Visual Identity for Semiconductor Industry Startup

Design studio Celerart created visual identity for Basesite, a startup behind Fabbuilder, an AI-driven software automating semiconductor fab design.

UNITED KINGDOM, January 12, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Design studio Celerart has completed visual identity development for Basesite, a revolutionary startup behind the Fabbuilder software product that automates semiconductor fab design using AI optimizers. The project encompassed a full branding cycle: from logo to web platform capable of conveying a complex technical concept through interactive elements.

About the Project

We crafted a visual narrative that simplifies Fabbuilder's complex tech. Interactive animations and site structure help B2B visitors understand its value in minutes, speeding up decision-making."

Vad S., Creative Director at Celerart

Basesite addresses a critical industry challenge: their Fabbuilder software cuts fab design timelines by weeks, saves millions of dollars, and eliminates numerous errors without compromising quality. Celerart faced the task of creating a visual language that would reflect the product's technological sophistication and reliability for a demanding B2B audience.

The team developed a comprehensive brand identity from scratch: a bespoke versatile logo, custom graphics, animations, 3D elements, and a set of corporate identity collaterals. The centerpiece of the project became a website built on the Webflow platform using a client-first approach.

Results

Working as a visual identity design agency, Celerart provided Basesite with a complete toolkit for market entry: from visual standards to a functional web presence with high performance metrics and a convenient content management system. The website demonstrates optimal loading speed and adaptability thanks to Webflow development best practices.

Celerart is currently working on the next phase of collaboration—redesigning the Fabbuilder application user experience, which will be unveiled soon.
