

Instinctools Strengthens Its Presence in France with CIR Certification

Instinctools has obtained the CIR certification, which allows its France-based clients to claim a tax credit of up to 30% on R&D

PARIS, FRANCE, January 14, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- *instinctools, a global software product development and consulting company, has officially obtained the CIR (Crédit d'Impôt Recherche) certification in France. This certification allows *instinctools' France-based clients to claim a tax credit of up to 30% on eligible Research & Development (R&D) expenses related to projects delivered by *instinctools.

When working with a CIR-certified technology partner, companies in France can reduce the overall cost of software development and sustain long-term investment in innovation with predictable project economics. This approach also simplifies collaboration with external development teams by mitigating financial, regulatory, and tax-related risks.

Under the CIR framework, Research and Development services delivered by *instinctools qualify for projects aimed at resolving scientific or technological uncertainties. These include the design and development of innovative digital products and platforms, the creation of new architectures and complex algorithms, as well as technical feasibility studies and proof-of-concept (PoC) initiatives.

“Obtaining the CIR certification is an important milestone that confirms our expertise in delivering high-quality R&D service,” said Alexey Spas, CEO and Co-founder of *instinctools. “It allows our French clients to innovate with greater confidence and focus on long-term technological growth. We see this as a strong foundation for deeper partnerships with French companies that view innovation as a competitive advantage.”

With the CIR certification, *instinctools continues to expand its presence in France and support organizations that prioritize innovation, scalability, and sustainable growth.
