SAN FRANCISCO, CA, UNITED STATES, January 18, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The 1980s were a time of musical experimentation and collaboration, and two iconic musicians, Danny DeGennaro and Bob Weir, crossed paths during this era as members of the Grateful Dead family band "Kingfish." As time went by, "Kingfish" evolved into several versions, always known for their fine guitar and vocal recordings. Now, as a tribute to the late Danny DeGennaro, original players and some new musicians have joined together to record several songs in his honor.

The album, titled "Kingfish 2022 : A Tribute to Danny DeGennaro," was recorded and produced by John Austin Mulhern, a long-time friend and collaborator of DeGennaro's. The album features a mix of original songs and covers, all with a unique twist that pays homage to DeGennaro's musical style. Mulhern says, "This project was a labor of love for all of us. Danny was a true talent and it was an honor to work on this tribute album with such talented musicians."

The album features a mix of original "Kingfish" members, including Michael O'Neill , Steve Shive, as well as new additions such as Paul Baroli Jr and Dan Galvano. Each musician brings their own unique sound and style to the album, creating a diverse and dynamic tribute to DeGennaro. The album also includes a special bonus track, a live recording of "Jump for Joy" featuring Michael O'Neill on lead vocals and guitar.
