Homeschool students often face unique challenges when preparing for standardized exams, including limited access to high-quality, affordable test preparation materials tailored to non-traditional learning paths. This collaboration aims to close that gap by offering homeschool families modern, adaptive, and mission-driven test prep at a significantly reduced cost.

“Homeschool students deserve the same access to high-quality test preparation as any other learner,” said Tyler York, CEO of Achievable. “Standardized exams like the ACT and CLT can open doors to college admissions and scholarships, but too often the prep resources are expensive or poorly designed for homeschool families. This partnership with Homeschool New York / LEAH is about meeting students where they are and making sure cost and access are never the limiting factors.”

The partnership with Homeschool New York / LEAH builds on Achievable's growing track record of mission-aligned collaborations through its Achievable For All program. Previous partnerships include work with the Coalition for Equity in Wholesaling, Mamás Unidas Little Rock, and BLK Capital Management, all of which focus on expanding access to education and professional advancement through free or deeply discounted learning resources.

Achievable's ACT and CLT prep courses emphasize clear explanations, adaptive learning technology, and realistic practice designed to help students study efficiently and confidently. By extending these resources to homeschool families, Achievable continues its broader mission to level the educational playing field and support learners from all backgrounds.
