biotech and pharmaceutical companies globally, announced today it has been Great Place To Work® Certified™ for the second year in a row. The Certification is based entirely on employee feedback about their workplace experience, trust, and culture.

With scores exceeding 90% across all critical indices, the results show that PVI fosters a consistently supportive and deeply engaging workplace where employees feel valued, empowered, and proud of the impact they make. Earning this recognition again reflects PVI's continued commitment to cultivating a high-performance, people-first environment where employees feel inspired.

“At PVI, we've built something unique and powerful—based on a culture that sets us apart—and I'm proud that our team received this recognition for the second-year running,” said Jennifer Johnson, Founder and CEO. “Our team drives our success, and as we grow and scale, we will continue to seek bold, strategic thinkers who thrive in complex environments and bring energy, rigor, and creativity to client challenges. Every day, I'm grateful for the people who work alongside me, and for the clients who trust us.”

PVI has grown rapidly since its founding by embedding seamlessly into client teams as a strategic force multiplier. “We will continue to expand our team and our strategic alliances as demand for our services grows,” added Johnson.

According to Great Place To Work, employees at Certified organizations are significantly more likely to experience strong leadership, look forward to coming to work, and trust their employer—key markers of long-term organizational health and business performance.
