According to the firm's analysis, consular processing timelines currently range from approximately two months to four or five months, depending on the workload and appointment availability at specific U.S. embassies and consulates. Applicants already in the United States who choose to file a change of status with USCIS typically see processing windows of three to five months, with the option to reduce review time to approximately 15 calendar days through premium processing.

"Understanding E-2 Visa wait times is critical for investors planning the launch or expansion of a U.S. business," said Alexander Jovy, Co-Managing Partner at Global Immigration Partners. "With proper preparation and a strategic filing approach, applicants can significantly reduce delays and improve the likelihood of a timely approval."

The firm emphasises that factors such as incomplete documentation, consular backlogs, seasonal application surges, and administrative processing can all extend timelines. Global Immigration Partners works closely with clients to develop compliant business plans, assemble strong supporting evidence, and select the most efficient filing strategy for each case.

"Our goal is to give investors the clarity and confidence they need to make informed decisions," Jovy added. "Whether an applicant chooses consular processing or a change of status, experienced legal guidance can make the difference between a predictable timeline and a lengthy delay."

TOP 5 REASONS E-2 VISAS GET DENIED

- 1 INSUFFICIENT INVESTMENT
The amount must be substantial enough to show real commitment.
- 2 WEAK BUSINESS PLAN
Vague projections or missing job creation plans can sink your case.
- 3 MARGINAL ENTERPRISE
Your business must create real U.S. jobs, not just support you
- 4 UNVERIFIED FUNDS
Always document where your investment money comes from
- 5 PASSIVE INVESTMENT
You must actively manage and direct the business
