relationship between dog and household.

“Training that starts in the living room and carries into real life is where lasting change happens,” said a spokesperson for Sally Said So Professional Dog Training. “The Greenville team focuses on behavior that shows up every day, so families can build calm routines and dependable responses in the places that matter most.”

A core starting point for Greenville clients is a comprehensive consultation described by the company as a two hour, one on one meeting with an expert trainer. During the visit, trainers review goals, evaluate behavior and environment, and demonstrate foundational obedience skills that may include sit, place, and leash walking. Consultations are conducted in the home for convenience and to assess behavior where it occurs most naturally. In addition to private training, the Greenville location offers group classes designed to develop real world reliability through distraction training and advanced skill building. The company describes group classes as covering deeper training beyond basics, including advanced obedience and Canine Good Citizen skills. Group training is also identified as an integral component of select ongoing program options.

Sally Said So Professional Dog Training reports that in home service is available throughout the Greenville area and surrounding cities, including communities such as Anderson, Berea, Clemson, Clinton, Dacusville, Duncan, Easley, Fountain Inn, Gaffney, Gantt, Gray Court, Greer, Inman, and Laurens. Travel coverage for additional locations may be available upon request.

The Greenville expansion aligns with the company’s broader regional growth, adding South Carolina coverage while maintaining a consistent training model across locations. The organization also highlights professional affiliations and safety standards across the brand, including AKC Canine Good Citizen Test Evaluators, Pet Tech CPR certified staff, and an association noted with DVM360.
