

Resilution Introduces Platform for Community-Owned Economic Infrastructure

Port Saint Lucie-Based Company Leverages Blockchain to Democratize Economic Participation for Businesses and Communities

PORT SAINT LUCIE, FL, UNITED STATES, February 2, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Resilution, a technology company specializing in blockchain and fintech solutions, announced the introduction of its platform designed to establish community-owned economic infrastructure. Led by Matthew R Ettswold, Resilution aims to apply blockchain technology to real-world economic activities, fostering direct connections between communities, businesses, and capital.

Matthew R Ettswold has over five years of experience in the intersection of blockchain, fintech, and economic systems. His work with Resilution is rooted in a philosophy that seeks to democratize complex financial mechanisms, making economic participation more accessible and transparent. The platform focuses on applying decentralized technology to tangible economic activity, moving beyond speculative ventures. Resilution envisions its platform functioning as a decentralized ecosystem for funding, commerce, and payments.

A key feature of the Resilution platform is its ability to bridge real-world business operations with decentralized economic participation. Verified businesses can present their funding requirements to a global community of participants. Through smart contracts, investors can transparently monitor how their contributions are utilized and track expected returns via personal dashboards, aiming to establish a high level of trust and accountability. The platform also integrates an AI named Eden, an acronym for Empowering Decentralized Economic Networks, further illustrating its blend of advanced technology with a community-centric vision.
