Aircraft manufacturer Boeing has announced a $10.3 million investment in Solace Power, a company specializing in wireless power technology.

"This represents an opportunity for Boeing to invest in a company operating in a new and emerging space that could radically change the world of wireless power," said Kagan.

Solace Power Inc. develops and manufactures wireless power solutions for a wide range of applications across multiple industries.

"Solace Power has said it plans to open a new production facility, which I understand could double its workforce during 2026," Kagan said. "That is the kind of growth I continue to expect from the company as it expands into additional industries and sectors."

Solace Power has developed core technology applicable across multiple market verticals, including automotive and telecommunications.

"This positions Solace Power to continue expanding into new markets, both within and beyond automotive and telecommunications," Kagan said.

"Solace Power is a global leader in wireless power technology," he added. "Boeing's investment
