

Litho Forum Opens a New Space for Web3 Builders, Developers, and Contributors Across the Lithosphere Ecosystem

A centralized community hub for Web3 builders, developers, and contributors.

SEATTLE, WA, UNITED STATES, February 3, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Litho Forum announced the launch of its new community space designed to bring together Web3 builders, developers, and contributors across the expanding Lithosphere ecosystem. The platform serves as a centralized hub for discussion, collaboration, and knowledge sharing, with structured channels to support open dialogue, technical conversations, and ecosystem-wide engagement.

Decentralized blockchain infrastructure and ecosystem tooling

As activity within the multichain, AI-enhanced Lithosphere network continues to grow, effective communication and structured community participation have become critical. Litho Forum fills this need by providing a transparent environment where ecosystem participants can exchange insights, share development updates, and collaborate on initiatives that drive innovation.

“Strong ecosystems are built on open communication and shared knowledge,” said J. King Kasr, Chief Scientist at Kaj Labs. “Litho Forum creates a space where builders and contributors can engage directly, exchange ideas, and help guide the evolution of decentralized infrastructure.”

The platform is publicly accessible and designed to evolve alongside the Lithosphere ecosystem, supporting long-term community engagement, governance discussions, and coordinated collaboration among participants at all levels.

About Litho Forum

Litho Forum is a community-focused discussion platform created to support communication, collaboration, and engagement across the Lithosphere ecosystem. The forum offers structured spaces for technical dialogue, ecosystem updates, governance topics, and community participation, strengthening coordination and innovation within decentralized networks.
