A Historic Call for Coordinated Global Action to pressure the Islamic Republic regime that has used mass violence against Iranian civil society and has been a challenge to International Security, was issued by the coordinating body of the opposition.

"The Transitional Leadership of Iran" formed in exile at the Munich conference has issued a formal call for a Global Day of Action on Saturday, February 14, marking a historic moment in which the free world is urged to act decisively—not only in support of the Iranian people, but in defense of its own security.

Speaking in his capacity as transitional leader, Crown Prince Reza Pahlavi called on Iranians in the diaspora and supporters of free democratic nations to mobilize simultaneously in coordinated demonstrations across the world. This Global Day of Action is not only a symbolic show of solidarity or a humanitarian appeal. It is a call for decisive action to resolve the violent actions by the Islamic regime against Iranian civilians and to facilitate the liberation and self-determination of the Iranian people.

In the eyes of Iranian civil society the “Islamic Republic” does not represent Iran or Iranians. It seized power through force in 1979, has never derived legitimacy from the free will of the people, and has sustained itself for decades through mass violence, executions, repression, and systematic violations of international law.

Beyond Iran’s borders, the regime has become a central engine of global terror, regional instability, antisemitism, hostage-taking, cyber warfare, and transnational repression as stated by the United States Government. Its networks, proxies, and operatives, threaten democratic societies worldwide as described by the US justice system. Confronting this regime is therefore not only an act of charity toward Iranians—it is a matter of US national security for the free world.

Inside Iran, repression has escalated sharply, marked by mass killings of over 50,000 innocent people, as announced by NGOs widespread arrests, and systematic internet shutdowns designed to conceal violent repression and silence the population. The Global Day of Action is intended to align global public pressure with the urgent need for policy decisions that can end this regime's capacity to harm both the Iranian people and the international community.

Demonstrations are expected in cities worldwide, with Los Angeles, Munich, and Toronto serving as central hubs anchoring a unified international mobilization.

The Transitional Leadership of Iran was formed in the summer of 2025 in Munich and is endorsed by the widest and most diverse coalition of Iranian opposition forces, both inside Iran and throughout the diaspora.

February 14: Clear Demands will be announced.

Participants will call on democratic governments to take six immediate actions, in their own strategic and security interests:

- Dismantle the regime's machinery of repression and terror, including decisive action against the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps and its command-and-control infrastructure as demanded by members of Congress
- Apply sustained maximum economic pressure by freezing regime assets worldwide and dismantling sanction-evasion networks that finance terrorism.
- Protect the flow of information by preventing internet shutdowns and ensuring uninterrupted connectivity used to expose crimes and save lives.
- End diplomatic protection and impose accountability, including expelling regime representatives, pursuing legal action for crimes against humanity, and formally designating the IRGC as a terrorist organization.
- Secure the immediate release of all political prisoners, including foreign and dual nationals held as hostages.
- Prepare for a democratic transition by committing to recognize a legitimate transitional authority when the regime collapses.

A Global Moment of Strategic Responsibility

February 14 marks a moment of decision. The continued recognition and accommodation of an illegitimate regime that rules through terror has prolonged suffering and instability. Coordinated global action can shorten this violence, restore accountability under international law, and help bring about a free, sovereign, and democratic Iran.

“This is not only Iran’s struggle,” the Transitional Leadership stated. “It is a collective stand against an unlawful regime that threatens civilized nations. Acting now is a responsibility owed to global security, international law, and the Iranian people’s right to choose their own future.”

The Transitional Leadership of Iran was formed in the summer of 2025 in Munich and is endorsed by the widest and most diverse coalition of Iranian opposition forces, both inside Iran and throughout the diaspora. United by shared democratic principles, this coalition has endorsed Crown Prince Reza Pahlavi as the representative of the Iranian people’s democratic will.

The Transitional Leadership of Iran works to end the illegitimate rule of the Islamic regime, restore Iran’s national sovereignty, and guide the country through a lawful transition to a free, democratic, and representative state grounded in the consent of its people.
