Thirty-five years ago on Valentine's Day, Academy-award winning Best Actress Jodie Foster ("aka Clarice Starling") and veteran actor Ted Levine (aka "Jame Gumb/Buffalo Bill") spent several weeks at Buffalo Bill's House filming what is considered to be among the most frightening scenes in cinematic history. This unique property was featured extensively throughout the climactic finale of The Silence of the Lambs and the home features many attributes that have remained preserved since filming took place 35 years ago!

Buffalo Bill's House, the real home where the climax to the five-time Academy Award winning film, The Silence of the Lambs was filmed, features the popular attraction - the infamous "well" - a replica of the one in the film where cinematic serial killer Buffalo Bill kept his victims captive. Uncannily similar to the one featured in the climax of the film, the re-creation of the well is a physical hole dug four feet deep into the ground in the basement of the former coal cellar in the house. Guests are encouraged to hop into the interactive well set for photo opportunities, which include a basket with lotion that can be raised and lowered with a drawstring, as well as the real life-inspired stuffed animal "Precious," the serial killer's dog.

Nestled at the base of the scenic Laurel Highlands, less than a half mile from the Great Allegheny Passage, Buffalo Bill's House is only 25 miles south of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.
